Is there a built-in function in the IUPAC name generator to get the position of the atom labelling the group? A: As noted in several comments, IUPAC nomenclature actually only requires (and it will only generate) IUPAC names. It doesn't require that the synthesis be trivial, which is why it can happen that this structure, for example, results in different IUPAC names depending on the database. There are numerous ways to generate IUPAC names. The wikipedia page on IUPAC nomenclature contains many examples. The fundamental building block is a name like IUPAC name XY-Z3-ABC1246-T11. In your case, the in-text examples use the IUPAC name XY-T11 instead. IUPAC name ABC1246 can be generated by appending to "ABC" at the end the number that you wish to appear as the first index. 1246 is the number here. If you are using RDKit then there is an IUPACNameGenerator class. The corresponding Java API is IUPACNameGenerator. These provide a way to transform molecules between RDKit format and IUPAC names. They use one of the existing methods to generate the IUPAC names. IUPAC names for derived structures can be generated from those. Q: Which methods are removed during backpressure in an akka Stream? Assuming I have a scala Actor running through streams, let channel (via Receive) which is passed to a futures(via Sink.foreach) Sink {
